Restorative Justice

Nga Kete is the Southern provider of Restorative Justice. Our team of three trained professionals cover Invercargill, Gore and Queenstown Court on a weekly basis.

Restorative justice is an informal, facilitated meeting between a victim and offender. It helps to give victims a voice and helps offenders to understand the consequences of their actions on other people. Sometimes the offender will agree to do something to help put right what has happened.

The opportunity for restorative justice takes place before an offender is sentenced in court. The judge will consider any agreements made during the restorative justice conference discussions at the time of sentencing, but this doesn't mean that the offender will receive a reduced sentence. The judge will also be told if no agreement could be reached in the restorative justice process.

Participation is VOLUNTARY throughout the restorative justice process. Informed consent is always sought from participants, victims determine their own level of participation and all outcomes are arrived at voluntarily.

Offenders are referred to Restorative Justice directly from Court by a judge. The offender must have pleaded guilty to the offence.

Te Pae Oranga

Iwi Community Panels (ICP) are an alternative resolution process for low-level offenders focusing on education, prevention and accountability. Service provided by Nga Kete Matauranga Pounamu Charitable Trust in partnership with police, local iwi and the wider community.

Police can refer a participant to the ICP if they are aged 17 years or over and the participant accepts the Police summary of facts.

What are Iwi Community Panels?

- ICP are a community-led alternative to court for low-level offenders. Offenders (known as participants) appear in front of a panel of three volunteer community members, which include the ICP co-ordinator, a police officer and, at times, an observer. The ICP also encourages a support person to be available i.e. a parent, friend or whanau member.
- An inquisitive hearing with a purpose of discovering the underlying reasons for offending and determine outcomes to address these - We want to affect long-term social and behavioural change to reduce reoffending.

What are the outcomes?

Outcomes should be tailored to each participant and should address their reasons for offending. Education and prevention focused (strengths based). Outcomes can include reparation, apology letters, voluntary work, and educational courses (defensive driving, driver licensing etc.)

All referrals to Te Pae Oranga from Police.
